My answer: I'd like to talk about a special gift I'm planning to buy for my close friend, Edin. We have long disorders since our university days. So I'd say I know him inside out. We share a lot of common interest, especially when it comes to Japanese culture and animation. Even though I'm currently based in Boston and he's based in Taiwan, we still spend a significant moment of time chatting online almost every week and discussing the latest series or gaming news. The game I have in my limited edition anime figure from a popular series with both adore. I'm hoping to grab it in a major and many conventions as coming on soon. This figure are quite rare and usually only available as a specific book during that event in the state. Since I know he's been icing this particular character for a long time, but couldn't find it anywhere, I think it would be the perfect surprise. I really want to buy this for him because he has been such a separated friend over the years. For instance, when I was struggling with my research in university, he was always there to listen and cheer me up, although it might be a bit expensive and require me to dwell in a long queue at the convention. I believe it is worth the effort.

I really want to buy this for him because he's been such a supportive friend over the years. For instance, when I was struggling with my research at Harvard, he was always there to listen and cheer me up. Although it might be a bit expensive and require me to wait in a long queue at the convention, I believe it's worth the effort. Seeing his reaction when he finally adds it to his collection would be incredibly rewarding for me, as it's a way to celebrate our long-standing friendship.
